

Employment Contracts

There's no question — part of running a successful business is drafting and maintaining contracts. It's one part of ensuring a clearly defined, legally transparent and smoothly running business.

In terms of employer/employee relations, these types of contracts can be hugely beneficial. Employers may want to retain an employee for a particular period of time, want an employee to do a particular job or want to enter into a non-compete agreement.

Organizations may not be able to attract certain types of employees without a contract. Failure to draft and maintain contracts correctly can create huge problems in the form of employee disputes or litigation that can cost thousands of dollars.

Because of the deep legal subtlety that can go into writing and reviewing contracts, it's important to have a comprehensive knowledge of employment law when entering this domain. While many large organizations may have in-house counsel, contracts are a vital component of small businesses. It can be of immense benefit to partner with an experienced and dedicated Gainesville employment contract lawyer.

North Central Florida Employee Rights Lawyer

For more than 25 years, I've used my comprehensive understanding of Florida employment law to help small and medium-sized businesses and nonprofit organizations draft contracts based on their unique business needs. Depending on the circumstances, I've worked with organizations to play a larger part in negotiating and writing contracts, and at other times I've lent my knowledge and experience as an attorney to reviewing and editing existing contracts. Regardless of the needs of your organization, I look forward to bringing my experience to work for you.
